

Abstract

Our first meeting can be seen as a kick-off meeting for upcoming sessions within the NERQ project. As previously announced, we will have presentations of course packages given at various research institutions. We are very excited to share with you that the following presentations will be given during our panel.

1. Silke Kniffert and Ulf Toelch, Berlin Institute of Health. 'Fundamentals of Responsible Research'. A course for medical doctoral student. The course is developed in blended learning format, mainly E-Learning and 3 face-to-face tutorials within one semester.
2. Maya Peled-Raz, University of Haifa. Online course for masters and PhD-students. It centers on research ethics (both clinical and social sciences related), review processes and inter-researchers' relationship.
3. Cyril Holm and Håkan Salvén, Stockholm university. Research Ethics for Human Science, an online course package that we give at Stockholm university for doctoral students at the faculties of Human science (Humanities, Social science and Law).

Let us look at each presentation as a starting point for sharing experiences. After each presentation we have the chance to engage in intense discussions. As we sum up our panel, we will try to extract the main take aways of our joint session.
